overview

The Master in Arts & Heritage, awarded by Sorbonne Université in Paris and delivered at Sorbonne University Abu Dhabi (SUAD), is a two-year programme designed for future cultural leaders, curators, heritage specialists, archaeologists, and art market professionals.

Blending academic excellence with professional immersion, the programme integrates advanced theory, applied research, and hands-on experience. Students develop strong analytical skills, curatorial vision, research expertise, and a deep understanding of the global cultural landscape — from museums and archaeological sites to auction houses and luxury-driven creative industries. A strong interdisciplinary foundation in the first year provides comprehensive training in museum studies, archaeology, cultural heritage, and the art market. In the second year, students specialise in one of three high-demand pathways:

- Museum and Curatorial Studies (delivered in partnership with the École du Louvre) – exhibition-making, collections management, curatorial practice, and institutional strategy.
- Archaeology and Cultural Heritage – fieldwork, site management, conservation strategies, and heritage policies.
- Art Market – art valuation, collecting practices, galleries, auctions, cultural entrepreneurship, and the intersection of art and luxury.

The curriculum combines:

- Academic excellence (rigorous training based on the strong academic tradition of Sorbonne University, developing critical thinking, solid research methods, and analytical skills).
- Professional immersion (internships, fieldwork, practical projects, and direct interaction with museums, heritage authorities, galleries, and cultural institutions).
- Regional anchoring (close links with the UAE's growing cultural sector, giving students access to major institutions and heritage initiatives in the region).
- Global outlook (an international approach to art history, heritage management, and the art market, preparing graduates to work in diverse cultural and global contexts).

Who is this programme for?

This programme is ideal for students who are:

- Passionate about art, heritage, museums, archaeology, or the art market
- Eager to build a career in the cultural and creative sectors
- Interested in combining academic knowledge with practical experience
- Curious about how cultural institutions operate locally and internationally
- Motivated to develop research, analytical, and professional skills

What makes this programme unique?

Bridging heritage, museums, art history and the art market

The programme adopts a hybrid model that integrates academic rigour with professional immersion. It approaches the art world not only as a discipline but as an ecosystem where heritage, institutions, collections, markets and cultural diplomacy intersect.

The international dimension of the programme

Courses are taught by Sorbonne University professors, renowned international scholars, business leaders, and leading professionals from the UAE and West Asia.

Students benefit from dual academic supervision (Abu Dhabi and Paris) and may pursue research training in France.

Regional connections of the programme

The Master is deeply embedded in the UAE's cultural and heritage ecosystem while engaging with global debates on collecting, curatorial practice, restitution, heritage preservation, and art market dynamics.

Distinctive features of the three pathways

Students progressively specialise in Museum & Curatorial Studies, which includes a prestigious partnership with École du Louvre in Paris; Archaeology & Cultural Heritage, which offers fieldwork opportunities in the UAE and advanced training in heritage management and preservation; and Art Market, which focuses on galleries, art fairs, auction houses, foundations, and luxury houses within global art systems. Each pathway culminates in a professional internship aligned with sector-specific career objectives.

Programme highlights

- A Sorbonne degree combining heritage, museums, archaeology and art market within one integrated Master
- Fieldwork opportunities on UAE archaeological sites
- Exclusive partnership with École du Louvre (Paris)
- Strong engagement with collections, curatorial practice, global art markets and luxury sectors
- Three specialised career pathways aligned with the UAE's cultural expansion
- Designed for both professional careers and doctoral pathways
- Taught by Sorbonne faculty and leading regional and international experts
- Professional immersion through high-level internships in Paris and the UAE
- Research-intensive programme with thesis and dual supervision (Abu Dhabi & Paris)

Programme structure

Academic Framework

The Master in Arts & Heritage combines lectures, tutorials, laboratories, workshops, field trips, and supervised independent research, offering a balanced academic and practical training. Students benefit from diverse teaching formats that support both theoretical understanding and applied learning across museums, heritage, archaeology, and the art market.

The programme includes the completion and defence of a substantial Master's thesis integrating academic research and professional experience. It comprises 120 ECTS credits over four semesters and combines advanced theory, applied research, and professional practice.

Assessment Framework

Assessment is based on continuous evaluation and final examinations. Students are assessed through presentations, written assignments, research projects, and case studies throughout the programme. This structure ensures regular feedback and progressive skill development in research, analysis, and professional practice.

Final Semester and Thesis

The final semester is dedicated to a professional internship aligned with each chosen pathway, together with the completion of a research-based Master's thesis and oral defence.

Internship in Paris (Museum pathway) Archaeological excavation site in the UAE (Heritage pathway) Gallery, art fair, auction house, foundation, or luxury house (Art Market pathway).
