overview

The Bachelor's degree in History is awarded by Sorbonne University Paris and is taught in French at Sorbonne University Abu Dhabi by internationally renowned professors. Students may choose between two specialized tracks : Political Science and Diplomacy, or Geopolitics and International Security. Prepared for understanding and analyzing the contemporary world, students can consider pursuing a Master's degree and a career in the broad field of international relations.

The Bachelor's degree adopts a multidisciplinary, global, and connected approach, spanning from Antiquity to the present day. Each course is selected for its relevance to current political, economic, social, religious, cultural, and diplomatic issues through workshops dedicated to analyzing contemporary events. These workshops are designed to decipher and address current events using innovative pedagogical approaches. Elective courses allow students to tailor their academic journey by adding skill sets in digital humanities, digital diplomatics, research methodology, and foreign languages.

Professional development is a significant component, with the introduction of a mandatory 2-month internship in the final semester, either in the UAE or internationally, through our Erasmus+ partnerships. Study projects encourage students to engage with professionals through seminars and to work on topics that help them consider their career paths, depending on the chosen track.

The courses are taught by internationally renowned professors who are recognized experts in their fields, meeting the standards of excellence and rigor characteristic of the French educational system. The program follows the European Credit Transfer and Accumulation System (ECTS), and the degree is awarded by Sorbonne University in Paris.
